We'll give it a go and tell you what we see happening. In the decade to come, will you be holding a touchscreen in your hand? Will your smartphone's screen be a "head-up display" with notifications on the side? Perhaps some sort of pure VR system. Or perhaps some sort of augmented reality system, overlaying something visible to our eyes on top of whatever we see around us. It is a brave new decade, and it is going to be a lot of fun trying to guess what we might be saying about mobile devices in 10 years time. Therefore, we have collected a list of 10 predictions and theories for what we think will be happening to our mobile technology devices in that time. 1. The big screen will be a big part of our lives Just as cars have always been part of your life, mobile devices are going to be an integral part of your life. Although it is 2019, and we should all be able to afford our own personal mobile device, we are not. So we will have a big screen device like a TV to show us what is happening in the world around us, just like we have always had. 2. Wireless charging will be the norm, not the exception Wireless charging seems like a revelation now, but it will have been a nearly integral part of our lives over the next ten years. We will be using mobile devices all the time, and there will be no need to plug them in to charge them. There will be a wireless charger on our desks, tables and to the floor. It will also be the norm that we will be able to charge them anywhere. Wireless charging is a long way from being deployed across the world, but it will be in a large part of the globe by 2025. 3. Wearable technology will be commonplace Although wearable technology is starting to be used in military settings, the very first widely-used wearable technology will be wearable health monitoring technology. The world of fitness will be revolutionised by wearable technology. We will all be able to track our health by wearing some sort of body monitoring technology. The virtual reality 09e8f5149f
