SYDNEY (Reuters) - Australian state-owned energy company EnergyAustralia, one of the world's largest gas producers, said on Thursday it would buy U.S. shale firm Calpine Corp for $1.8 billion, making a global leader in shale gas. Calpine plans to sell a 25 percent stake in a pair of offshore wind farms in western Australia to Australian fund Unaoil for $1.5 billion, easing worries about the future of the project in a country already keen to harness its clean energy resources. EnergyAustralia said the takeover, one of the largest in Australian history, would help it increase its visibility in the global oil and gas industry and boost its fuel supply, gas storage volumes and retail business. Calpine, which supplies power to California and Texas, also said the deal would help it strengthen its position as a leader in the U.S. offshore wind market. "The combination of our operations and resources under one roof will be a powerful platform to remain competitive in the global energy landscape," said Chief Executive Officer Mark Papa in a statement. The deal, which is subject to regulatory approvals and is expected to close by the end of the year, would create a company with reserves worth about a quarter of the world's gas. EnergyAustralia's net profit dropped 47 percent in 2016 as it hedged gas prices and posted its first annual loss in more than a decade. The deal is seen as a rebound strategy, with the company's shares, which are up around 40 percent in the past year, diving in recent weeks after it announced it was closing a 60 percent of their 2015 capital return to buy. Mark Selby, an analyst at Deutsche Bank, said the deal would allow the company to add new reserves and services and strengthen its balance sheet. However, he said the full upside of the deal was limited, with Calpine's U.S. shale gas assets not a significant catalyst for the company's share price. "The US shale story is probably as old as the business itself," Selby said in a note to clients.
