Call of Juarez: Gunslinger..Facebook and Snapchat are the hot kids on the block of cloud applications, but there is a middle child that should have grown up to be big and continue to grow to become a multi-billion dollar company: Google. Google is, at least in the eyes of the world, the king of search. Perhaps that is partially because they are actually the king; they invented the search engine, and have had more of a hand in the creation of Google than any other company. However, they were not even the first. The lead developer of the first search engine was a company called BackRub. A couple of years later, BackRub was acquired by Excite, which was eventually bought by Yahoo. Yahoo expanded on the idea by adding the concept of search to their site, and it worked well enough that within a couple of years, Yahoo had become the largest source of Internet traffic, overtaking the now more famous Google. Google was built in 1998 by Stanford students Larry Page and Sergey Brin. They didn't mean for it to be the online encyclopedia, but that is what the first version turned into. After a couple of years, they dropped this name, but nobody seemed to notice. Then, in March of 2004, they renamed it "Google.com." They also gave it a logo, which you can see in the picture above. There are a lot of rumors on the internet that if you know what you are doing, you can download the old Google
