State of the art analysis and physics engine, which allows for amazingly detailed, real-life locomotive modelling. All features that are usually available only in reality-based engines Loco dynamics - which ensures realistic locomotion. The engine follows the laws of physics by which it is driven. Each movement of the locomotive results in rotational movement of the tires (axle) and of all other parts of the loco, starting with the four wheels. Both, loco and carriages are controlled by a software, based on well-known vehicle models. This level of performance is combined with individually programmed motion, applied to the engines and the coaches. This results in an unparalleled visual and audio presentation. It takes place on a flat earth, which is divided into two zones - green and yellow. Yellow represents the goal, and in order to prevent the goal you need to kick the ball into the pockets of your opponents. As you play, you need to alternate between the four main goals, where in each court you will have to kick the ball into one of your opponents' pockets. All the courts have limited time, from which you only have 24 seconds before your opponents will be able to do an effective countermove. During gameplay, not only will you need to think of the best moves and tactics, but you will also need to anticipate what the artificial intelligence is capable of doing and react to it in time.(CNN) -- Solange Damoiseau, an engineer and mother of three, lives in the suburbs of Paris. For years she has worried about her children's education and happiness, now she's very concerned about the power of the Internet. The Internet means so much that we take for granted, she says -- social interaction, web surfing, entertainment. "I remember when I was a child and I could actually talk with a friend," she says. But she's also very concerned about the company some kids are keeping on the Internet. Damoiseau, 43, says many parents know about cyberbullying but don't realize how pervasive it has become, especially for kids. In fact, there are more cyberbullying sites than there are sites for surfing, said Ursula MacGregor of SafeKids, a leading U.S. organization that wants to keep children safe online. She says the problem is amplified because kids are seeing things they shouldn't see. The Internet has become a "normalized space" that kids and teenagers have easy access to, according to MacGregor. She suggests parents talk to their children about what they do on the Internet. Some teens say it's hard to be too careful, because they worry their parents may see what they're doing. Damoiseau's son, Jerome, is nearly 10 years old, an age when it's critical for children to understand the rules of the digital world. Jerome wants to be an engineer when he grows up -- and he's already started preparing for his career. He knows his father and mother use the Internet, so he watches them and tries to memorize their passwords. The Internet has created a world where he can

FAQ's Tutorial Soundtrack DLC Collection It's been a while since I've updated this blog. I've been pretty busy and wanted to release new content (if you haven't seen it, check out my playthrough of DMC 3, it's pretty awesome), but also, I started to play Dark Souls and didn't want to ruin my own experience. It's a series I've been keeping a close eye on since I was a kid, and was always on the lookout for games to emulate (not to mention practice
