"I tried to cheer it up and take it as a lesson and I didn't get that much out of it, I got the extreme opposite of what I wanted out of it. It was the worst experience of my life." Advertisement It was Taylor's first interaction with the criminal justice system. If it was his first time, it wasn't his last. That's because Taylor was charged with his first gun offense at 19. He was sentenced to 60 days in county lockup and gave up hunting for almost a year. "I was a pretty big gun enthusiast. I grew up around hunting," Taylor said. But it wasn't until after his first felony gun conviction in August of 2013 that Taylor ditched his NRA membership. "I had to get out," he said. "It's not something I want to be associated with." Since his arrest in Chicago, the incident in prison and several subsequent gun charges, Taylor has been either locked up or under supervised release for the past three years. Most recently he spent 17 months in prison. In November, a federal judge approved a plea deal for three years of supervised release for Taylor. "As far as any other consequences of this incident, I was lucky, I was not prosecuted for any other thing," Taylor said. "Other than that, I'm just thankful to be out and it's funny because I think I'm the only guy on this street that's been incarcerated." Taylor's band is called The Pit Crew, a mix of hip-hop with some reggae-type influences. "The songs are all about the joys and sorrows of surviving as a youth," he said. "It's a matter of perspective. You got to deal with it in a positive way." Taylor has been working on a music video for his song, "I Got Her e79caf774b
