Welcome to Roblox! Create your own games or play other people's. Using a no-code game development platform, you have the power to take your idea and bring it to life using visually-graphical gaming languages. Are you looking to make your own game? Customize and play your own game within the Roblox Platform using programming languages such as Lua, HTML, CSS, and JS. Students can learn from experts in academics. Experts can learn from real-world practitioners. Both from the same platforms, students and experts can engage with each other and forge a powerful network of information exchange. Maximizing the value of a student-led symposium is the responsibility of the entire institution. This includes all stakeholders, including the organizers, key speakers, and other faculty members and staff. The key to successful planning is to take a holistic approach to the planning process, starting with a problem-focused vision to guide the planning process. The real-world experience of organizations like the Consortium on Open Educational Resources (C-OER) and the Coalition for Networked Learning (CNL) are guides to help planning teams move toward a cohesive vision that leads to an effective implementation. Student-led symposia (SLS) are gatherings of hundreds of college students to discuss a topic of interest to students. These SLS occur on multiple campuses throughout the country and are usually hosted by key organizations or faculty. The purpose of the SLS is to engage students and expose them to a wide range of ideas and experiences. The intent is to inspire students to become the leaders of tomorrow. Typically, SLS do not require a formal commitment from faculty, as the main goal is to create community among students. The Consortium on Open Educational Resources (C-OER) unites organizations that are focused on supporting the development, distribution, and use of open educational resources (OER) and open educational practices. Open educational practices can support increasing student engagement in learning. OER can encourage students to interact and learn from each other through different and independent modalities, such as textual, virtual, and hands-on methods. In addition, OER offers an affordable option for faculty to provide content to all learners, regardless of financial circumstances. With the growing importance of OER as an educational practice, C-OER was formed in 2010 as a not-for-profit organization to encourage the increase of OER and open educational practices, as well as to help support those
