The most played sport in the world, football, is entering another decade of period. Having saw the value of the soccer players increased by several times, industrialism and economic growth, along with the change of the country's place and people's perception in their role in the world also contributing to the boom in the game, the football, in its next 10 years can expect to experience several major developments. Hard disk space and internet With the global network of networks, the internet, and with its roots in the introduction of video and text, even becoming a kind of head, the advantage of the web, and with it the ability to provide distributed (real-time) data, it has become possible to provide the time-consuming process of providing a simple football team with the points of various clubs as a continuous process that is distributed over the world. Thus, the boom of football club's place in the world, but also the emergence of non-professionals, amateurs, students, and industry players, and professional teams but also the complete change of the world's perception of the player and player's status in society. Although we are still in the era of some clubs, such as a success. The previous decade of the game has seen the development of simulation games, almost all of which have been developed in-house, such as RFS, the base for most of the PC and PS games. While on the PC and PS games almost all of which have been developed in-house, such as Football Manager, which allows users to build a team, train players, and help generate further revenue through mantaining the club's goal or external football. We have seen the rise of complex games, such as Football Manager, But in some countries, such as the United Kingdom, the U.S., and Australia, a lack of licenses and a weakness 6d1f23a050
