The new Windows 10 October Update for 1709 is now available to the public. Microsoft released the October 2018 Update, or v.1809, to Windows Insiders a few days ago, and it has already been downloaded more than 100 million times. The October Update fixes a serious flaw in Windows Security. To find out if your PC is affected by the flaw, check out this article . There's quite a few fixes that are new in the October 2018 Update v.1809 The new Windows 10 version 1809 will be released. Microsoft is working hard on the final version of this new version of Windows 10. Already, some Insiders have had access to the new platform updates. That means that Microsoft already has the new software for testers. Microsoft is giving users another look at the beta version of Windows 10 v1809, the Windows 10 Fall Creators Update. For the first time this year, Windows Insiders can download and test the preview of the October 2018 Update, also called the Fall Creators Update, and the new preview now includes the client side components for Windows 10 Enterprise In my recent post, I pointed out that the new version of Windows 10, v1809 isn't available on the Microsoft Download Center yet. But, it doesn't matter. As Windows Insider program participant, you can always download it through your test PC and configure it to the latest. This article will help you do so. For users of VMs, here's more information: The distribution of Visual C++ redistributable packages is built-in to VMs which means it doesn't have to be installed manually on a PC. VMs from VirtualBox, VMware Player or Microsoft Hyper-V use the Microsoft VC++ Redistributable for Visual Studio 2017 which is located in the Add/Remove Programs in the Applications >> >> >> Microsoft Visual C++ 2017 category.

The basic premise behind Microsoft's updated security-testing lab is to make sure that any previously published exploits are not falling on fresh operating systems with unpatched vulnerabilities. As security guru Bruce Schneier put it, the lab is designed to put a zombie in the body politic. Unfortunately, the method they use to do so might not be politically sound. The fine print in the KB2502789 changelog is that this update will be available once Windows

Server 2008 is no longer supported, and it's unclear when exactly that will be.

None of these details appear to be public knowledge, but the fact that Microsoft is so open about this is a good sign that this isn't a stunt. I have a crazy idea that makes sense on its face: we could simply combine Microsoft's existing Local Security Policy settings with some other update that's already being carried out, and get them both to work simultaneously. I don't know if this will actually work, but it would free me from having to come up with a new technique on my own. A new vulnerability could be used to remotely take complete control of PCs that are infected with malware, including critical data and information. This vulnerability doesn't require users to take any action on their part. This security vulnerability was publicly disclosed by security researchers at Microsoft. The threat was identified as a potential issue with some workflows, and workarounds were provided to address the issue by Microsoft, the United States Department of Homeland Security, the Australian Computer Emergency Response Team (AusCERT) and the software manufacturer.
