Image caption David Cameron said if Parliament voted for legislation, he would "respect that and get on with the job" If a vote is taken on the Investigatory Powers Bill it would be "foolish" not to carry it forward, David Cameron has said. The prime minister, speaking in the House of Commons, said he "totally agrees" with a move by the Liberal Democrats to have the Bill's draft clauses considered separately. But he warned there would be "serious consequences" if MPs backed the move. Labour has not indicated its position on the bill, but Lib Dem leader Nick Clegg said he wanted the "bulk" of the draft clauses to be debated. 'Lurching' Mr Cameron said: "I respect what he [Mr Clegg] said and I totally agree with him. We shouldn't be playing with different rule books in the Conservative Party and the Liberal Democrats. "You can't have your cake and eat it." The prime minister added: "If we do this bill, we must carry it forward. "I think it's for the country to make a judgement on this. "If Parliament votes for it, I will respect that and get on with the job, with a view to getting it through." Mr Cameron was answering a question from Labour's Andy Burnham, who asked him what he would do if the House of Commons backed the Liberal
