With support for the new native web APIs, Photoshop for Android and iPhone acquires a new set of features that can be used to create graphics, refine and manipulate professional imagery, and create 3D workflows. With these applications, users can use Photoshop to create a 3D effect in native browser, such as Perspective, or create 2D drawings in a spherical world, then access that text, objects, and selections from a form factor they use regularly. There are two interfaces of Photoshop on the web, one desktop, and one mobile. A new mobile interface allows users to view and work on images on their mobile devices from anywhere. From creating to sharing to saving to sharing, the modern mobile interface of Photoshop for iOS and Android mobile apps now provide UI components that are consistent and efficient to access rich media. Adoption of hyperlinks and other modern features have been incorporated at the component level for designers to quickly access essentials with a few clicks. Adobe has been investing in native web technologies for many years, and today we're broadening the reach of those APIs to address challenging business scenarios. With this release, Photoshop for web enables a seamless workflow for designers across immersive capabilities such as layer animations and directory browsing. It also provides mobile editors with the tools to collaborate on large projects from anywhere on any device. Working with Photoshop requires a new set of techniques to best navigate the massive amounts of images and data. New features include preventing accidental undo and reimaging, object tracking, automated curved scrolling, layers in folders, and other file management tools. You can now copy and paste files, or open and save at once from the gallery by dragging and dropping a file on a web tab, and more workflows have been deployed to make working with large volumes of files easier
